AMERICAN NEWSPAPER EDITORS EXAMINED EVERY ASPECT OF EICHMANN ARREST AND TRIAL IN ISRAEL, GIVING ALL SHADES OF OPINION THROUGHOUT THE LAND

Since Eichmann was found, American newspapers have editorially examined every aspect of his arrest and trial in Israel, says the A.D.L. Bulletin of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith. Some have confined their comments to the drama of the situation; some have bitterly criticized Israel's actions, some supported them, and others — like the Pasadena Star-News — have had a change of heart as more facts came to light. This round-up of editorial reaction offers virtually all shades of opinion expressed throughout the American nation.

Adequate Reparation

"What is 'adequate reparation' for the unspeakable crimes of which Adolf Eichmann stands accused? The only answer once justice is done in this case is a rededication to the principles of freedom and of the sanctity of human life: the two cannot be separated. Let this lesson be learned on both sides of the Iron Curtain." — NEW YORK TIMES

Israel's Tragedy

"Eichmann is the ugliest living symbol of Nazi brutality, of Nazi disregard for the concept of justice, of Nazi contempt for civilized values. What a tragedy it would be if he should become an instrument for the debasement of Israeli standards of humanity and justice. What happens to Eichmann is of relatively little importance. What happens to Israel, a symbol of the world's best hopes, is of immense importance. . . —WASHINGTON POST & TIMES HERALD

Eichmann and the Duty of Man

". . . Auschwitz utterly abandons to injustice anywhere (justice) kin, a conspirator with evil. The most terrible line in Eichmann's story (as published in Life) is his summary of the failure of his cold-blooded bargain with Kastner — one million Jews for 10,000 trucks. Says he: 'The plain fact was there was no place on earth that would have been ready to accept the Jews, not even this one million. It is, God help us all, a true statement. It was true of the United States of America. That all men are responsible for each other's crimes is a theological proposition. Its political corollary is less sweeping but nonetheless true: every citizen is responsible for all the injustice in his own community . . . Let no citizen of any community use Eichmann as a scapegoat for his own sins of neglect or uncancern."—LIFE

Israel and the Law

". . . If the judges of Israel . . . refuse to proceed with Eichmann's case, they will vindicate a principle which Judge Cuthbert Pound of the New York Court of Appeals articulated forty years ago: 'Although the defendant may be the worst of men . . . the rights of the best of men are secure only as the rights of the vilest and most abhorrent are protected.' Nor would Judge Pound have claimed any novelty for his principle. It goes back tens of centuries, deep into the law and history upon which Israel is built."—THE NEW REPUBLIC

Eichmann's Trial by Israel Is Better Than No Trial

"There is something repugnant about watching any individual — even so bloody a villain as Eichmann — tried by his own victims after they have apprehended him illegally.

"Nevertheless, the matter appears to be settled. Perfectly understandable popular and political feelings in Israel have prevailed, and Eichmann will be tried by the Jews. That at least will be better than no trial at all. Though we would prefer justice at the hands of the international community or of his own country, we would far rather see the Nazi mass-murderer tried by Israel than escape scot-free." — PROVIDENCE (R.I.) JOURNAL

The Eichmann Case

"The nations of the world obviously cannot accept any claim to a transcendent right held by Israel to ignore international law and order in fulfillment of the demands of an Israel-defined 'higher' justice. Moreover, the assumption by Premier Ben-Gurion and his government of the right to speak and act in this case for all Jews 'as the only sovereign authority in Jewry' only intensifies the confusions and contradictions already taken in the nature of the Israeli state . . . We are afraid that on every count — in the interests of international order, the future relations of Israel with other sovereign states, the exposure and prevention of the evil of anti-Semitism — the course which Israel is taking threatens to do much more harm than good."—THE COMMONWEAL

World Trial for a Killer

"The whole argument over the case of Adolf Eichmann, who is to be tried in Israel by those who escaped him, could be settled by handling the monster over to a world court of justice. If he faces an Israel court, there will always [illegible] That would surprise the western world. Or, more logically, by a court set up by the UN. The verdict could not possibly be other than guilty; nevertheless, the principle of dispassionate justice would be vindicated." — NEWSDAY (Long Island, N.Y.)

And So To Trial

". . . If a suitable tribunal were available the Nazi who directed slaughter of Jews in wartime Germany would have an international trial. But the World Court has jurisdiction between nations rather than over individuals. And neither West Germany nor Poland has shown a desire to take the case out of Israel's hands. It is reasonable to expect that the judicial system of Israel, notwithstanding the deep emotional content of the matter, will act with careful regard for the requirements of evidence and protection of rights of the accused. For the world at large, the trial may bring home a fact that many still have not assimilated . . . the Jews suffered a proportionately heavier casualty list than any of the nations principally engaged in World War II. As the tale of Nazi madness unfolds, the universal prayer should be 'Guard all of us from ever falling prey to this or another hysteria of hate.'" — CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

'Catch and Kill'

"Eichmann deserves to die a thousand deaths — a million. So hang him, shoot him, or throw him in the sea to avenge your murdered kinsmen. But don't expect the world to believe it is witnessing a trial when the offenses were committed before the 'laws' were passed, before the state was born." —MONTGOMERY (Ala.) ADVERTISER

The Moral Issue is Simple: Eichmann Must Be Tried

"The legal problems involved in the case of Adolf Eichmann are intricate but there isn't any moral problem. Anyone with normal human instincts can answer, instantly and correctly, the question whether he should be tried for the ghastly crimes of which he is accused . . . To let him escape trial on any sort of technicality would be a failure of justice that would disgrace the human race." — CHICAGO AMERICAN

The Judges Judged

". . . Hitler murdered in the name of a higher "justice or history" that was to usher in an Aryan paradise. Ben-Gurion has a far higher concept of history, but even he cannot take to himself the task of Divine Providence, dispensing a divine judgment from a human tribunal . . . One does not simply 'clean up the world' by disposing of anyone who offends one's moral sense, no matter how drastically . . . Ben-Gurion, whose people gave to the West the Law of God, which has for centuries enlightened us, should not go down in history known as one careless about the laws of man. Or history may judge the judges." — RICHMOND (Va.) NEWS LEADER

His Own Petard

". . . As far as Eichmann is concerned, it is retributive justice that his merited fate may overtake him through what is technically injustice . . . You have to feel mighty strong on the principle of law to feel sorry for Eichmann." — DALLAS NEWS

Reconsidered Opinions On Eichmann Seizure

"It is not often that we get an opportunity to confess that we are fallible . . . Our view as expressed in these columns about a month ago was that regardless of Eichmann's crimes, Israel was guilty of illegality in seizing him by the methods it used and further that Israel's jurisdiction was dubious. Bit by bit, however, more data bearing on this strange case has unfolded, and as we have studied it we have concluded that Israel's case is at least as good as that of her critics . . . "—PASADENA (Cal.) STAR-NEWS

Tragic Parallel

"The time approaches when the world's attention will be focussed on the crime of genocide as Adolf Eichmann is brought to this world's judgment for his part in the extermination of Jews in Nazi concentration camps . . . Today in the bleak Himalayan nation of Tibet another innocent people are being systematically destroyed (by) Red China's brutal rape . . . If the approaching trial of the Nazi Eichmann now reminds the Communist invaders of Tibet that the world will demand a reckoning for such crimes against humanity, it will have served one of its chief purposes." — NEWARK (N.J.) NEWS.

Arrogant to the End

"One can only conclude that Herr Eichmann's mind is somewhat off the track, and such an individual is unfit for human society. We assume Israeli authorities will see to it, beyond all doubts, that Eichmann is not allowed to endanger anyone else with his strange mentality and conscience."
—PEABODY (Mass.) TIMES

From Germany Today: "We Must Explore The Depths"

[illegible] newspaper [illegible] editorial, to [illegible] point up the meaning of the Eichmann case to Germans today:

". . . None of us needs to identify himself with this murderer. But how many of us can honestly say that they had no proclivity whatever for the ideology of 'race conscious' madness, or that they had sufficient moral fibre and political instinct to comprehend the full extent of its fiendishness? For us, the value of this trial is not only that justice will catch up with the man charged with the 'final solution of the Jewish problem.' It is a trial that calls for us to leaf through our old diaries . . . We cannot find release from past events by pushing them aside . . . We believe that this trial can promote catharsis. There is little to be achieved by talking. Listening will be a great deal more important, even if doing so forces us to explore the very depth of our hearts. If we are prepared to do this, instead of — like Lot's wife — rigidly staring at what is behind us, then we shall really be on the road that leads out of the past into the future. . ."

The Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung said that "Eichmann's name makes us newly conscious of the fact that the German nation may not feel free of the responsibility for the atrocities committed in its name. It is not for us to question the Israelis as to the where and how of arrest . . . It is of no importance where Eichmann is brought to justice. His crime was without parallel and there have been great shifts in juridical competence in the spheres with which that crime is connected . . .

"Eichmann's Own Story," which first appeared in Life magazine in December, was used in the German picture magazine Revue in February under the title, "The Confessions of Adolf Eichmann." Unlike Life, however, Revue made clear that few of Eichmann's remarks went unchallenged. A note at the beginning of the first of Revue's three articles said, "With the support [illegible] are marked. Throughout the [illegible] of the article, in small boxes, [illegible] authoritative statements dispute Eichmann's "facts."

A background study prepared by B'nai B'rith International Council says:

Unnoticed by the press, a debate in the United Nations focused on an obscure article in the draft International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. Neither in Article XV, the matter at issue, nor in the intense week-long discussion about it, were Adolf Eichmann or his impending trial mentioned. Yet few of the 99 members of the UN General Assembly's Committee III were unaware of the Eichmann case which, like a ghostly presence, hovered over the arguments and dictated much of their character.

The first paragraph of Article XV of the Draft Convention (initially drafted by the U.N. Commission on Human Rights) reiterates civil liberties concept opposing ex post facto trials. "No one," it states, "shall be held guilty of any criminal offense" because of an act which "did not constitute a criminal offense, under national or international law, at the time when it was committed." There are those who believe international law is still too nebulous and vague to serve as a yardstick for defining criminal offense. Others feel strongly that civilized mankind now demands international standards for humane conduct.

The charter of the International Military Tribunal signed in London on August 8, 1945, declared persecution on racial or religious grounds and "crimes against humanity" and the waging of wars of aggression to be "crimes against peace" — terms which had heretofore appeared in any criminal statute. International law which lacks a continuing legislative body depends even more than domestic law on cases and precedent for its evolution and development. It grows, as does the common law in Anglo-Saxon [illegible] the application of settled principles of conduct to a particular situation.

Paragraph 2 of Article XV supports "trial and punishment" for an act which "was criminal according to the general principles of law recognized by this community of nations" even though there was no violation of a spe-

THE BOSTON DINNER PARTY

BY BURTON BERNSTEIN

REPRINTED WITH THE KIND PERMISSION OF AMERICAN JUDAISM, THE ORGAN OF THE UNION OF AMERICAN HEBREW CONGREGATIONS; AND THE AUTHOR

(Burton Bernstein is staff writer for The New Yorker, in which many of his stories on Jewish life in New England have appeared. "The Boston Dinner Party" will be included in his forthcoming book of short stories, "The Grove", being published this season by McGraw-Hill.)

The wedding invitation, looking as if it had been dipped several times into a dish of quick-drying heavy cream, arrived in the same mail as the note. Typewritten on a plain piece of white paper, the note had a quasi-military formality about it. It was from the bride-to-be's uncle, Endicott Brand, and it announced his intention of giving a dinner party at his Beacon Hill home for Robert Kurtz and Doodie Brand the night before their February wedding. Then, at the bottom of the paper, was Robert's suddenly familiar stark, upright handwriting: "Hope you can make it! Robert."

There was no problem about making it. I'd just have to leave New York for Boston a little earlier on the Saturday in question. The problem was did I want to make it. I had pretty much lost touch with Robert since I had come to New York to work, and the few times I had run into him over the last five years, I was forced to admit to myself that I found him fairly boring — in that special well-let's-examine-all-the-possibilities way an old friend who becomes a lawyer is boring. However, he was an old friend, albeit a summer one, and I felt duty-bound to attend every moment of what promised to be his greatest achievement so far.

It occurred to me, while driving over the February gray Wilbur Cross Parkway towards Boston, that as long as I had known Robert Kurtz, he had never been called any name but Robert—never Bob, nor Robbie, nor Bert — just Robert. I spent a long stretch of the remainder of that drive trying to figure out why.

Boston was going under in a sleet storm when I arrived. Snow had fallen earlier and the wet sleet hammering down on top of it like globs of gruel turned the downtown area into a raging sea of porridge. The driving was dangerous and by the time I reached Dave Eisen's apartment house, where I was staying for the weekend, we were already late for the party. Dave Eisen was the third member of the summer triumvirate from the Grove. Dave, like Robert, had elected to stay in Boston after college but, unlike Robert, he had gone to work for his father. Robert was currently employed in his future father-in-law's ancient Boston law firm.

I left my bag at Dave's and together we dashed back to my car. We crept with the almost blind traffic towards Beacon Hill, leaving a symmetrical wake of slush when we could get moving. To make matters worse, many streets leading to Beacon Hill had become one-way since I was last in Boston and I was becoming very confused.

"When is Robert going to become mayor or governor or something and straighten out this damn city?" I asked Dave, once he had pointed out the latest secret formula for driving up the Hill on a slippery evening.

Dave lit a cigarette nervously. He never quite trusted machines, especially when the elements were working against them. "It won't be long after tomorrow," he said through rapid inhalations. "All that's left for him to do now is trap the Irish vote, and he's working on that with the maid he just hired. She's still got the dew of County Cork behind her ears."

With the motor and tires whining wildly, we ground slowly and unsurely up the Hill, traveling sidewards most of the way. "You know," I said, tensely peering out the windshield, "I can believe it, knowing Robert. This wedding business and Doodie and all that perfectly fits the famous Kurtz timetable, doesn't it?"

"Ah, you remember," Dave said. We were almost at the summit of the Hill, so neither of us dared say anything more until we were positive we would make it. Dave involuntarily pushed against the dashboard, as if to help the car along by some human effort. Finally, we arrived at the top and I slipped the car up to what I thought was the curb and considered it parked.

"The Brand house is just over there," Dave said, pointing down a side street. He was breathing more easily now, walking through the heavy slush. "Everything's always worked out just so for that guy," he went on, "ever since he let us in on the schedule of his life back in the Grove. He planned out every step and by God it worked. I'll tell you something: I'm jealous of Robert. Not so much of him, really, but of how he gets whatever he goes after, Exeter, Harvard, the Law School, the Law Review, the Judge Advocate commission in the Army, the proper Boston law firm, and now the perfect girl — Miss Governor's Wife of 1980. My God, it's right out of Marquand at his worst! Things like that aren't supposed to work out so smoothly for nice-little boys from the Grove, but for him they do. I've never seen anything like it!"

"You're sounding bitter, Dave," I said teasingly.

Dave slipped slightly in the slush, but regained his balance with a graceless maneuver. "Yeah," he said, when he recovered, "you laugh because you live in New York and don't give a damn, but you should see it up close, like I do. And it's not just sour grapes, either."

We stood before the awesome front door of the Brand house. It was the sort of place I had spent my youth viewing in passing, without ever thinking or caring too much about what was going on inside — at least no more than I would care about what went on inside Martian dwellings. But rapping the brass knocker, I suddenly felt like a child being dared to play a trick-or-treat prank on the local police chief's abode. Dave was ill-at-ease himself in his dark, loose-hung way, as he stamped the sticky snow off his shoes. "Have you ever figured out why nobody — not even us — ever called Robert anything but Robert?" I asked him. Dave bunched together his heavy black eyebrows, flecked with drops of sleet. "Yes," he said. "He never let us."

A white-aproned maid opened the door to reveal a Holiday magazine two-page, four-color spread of gracious living in Boston. Even the room's occupants seemed to have struck assigned poses for a non-existent portrait camera. The flawless tableau shattered when Robert rushed over to greet us, as we emerged from the hallway. "Hey," he almost shouted. "Great to see you guys. You made it. Great! Come on in and meet everybody." I noted quickly that Robert was much the same as ever: absurdly tall, with that developed Harvardian slouch, those smooth, unclassifiable features, and that constant nonchalant aggressiveness. Just his haircut was a little less boyishly short.

With a controlled gush, Doodie Brand appeared at Robert's side. She was a pert, pretty, sandy blond girl, whose face, since the first time I had met her years ago, had taken on a curiously mischievous cast, as though she were about to announce to all present that if they cared to observe their shoes, they would find that they had all been given hot-foots. She happily accepted our heartiest congratulations and wishes for the future. "Now Robert and I will have to get you boys hooked next," she said coyly. "I've got two redheaded prospects here tonight—you know, the Armstrong twins. Anyway, come meet the family."

The family included Norman and Mary Brand, Doodie's parents, Chad Brand, her brother and Robert's best man and Harvard classmate, and Endicott Brand, her uncle and our host. Above the roaring fireplace was a commanding portrait of a dour, white-haired lady, obviously the late Mrs. Endicott Brand. A perusal of Norman Brand, while he laboriously pumped my hand, told me he was quite drunk.

"You boys would be Robert's summer friends, right?" Mr. Brand said thickly. He had a kind of sly teddy bear look, which set him apart from his older, more distinguished brother and law partner, Endicott. "I've met Robert's winter friends, but I believe this is the first time I've met his summer ones. My own son, Chad, is one of Robert's winter friends, aren't you, Chad?" He put a fatherly arm around his son. "Chad wants to go to Washington and work for some government agency, instead of staying in his father's law firm like a good boy — like Robert here. Robert's a good boy, don't you fellows think so?"

Robert saved us the embarrassment of answering by throwing back his head and laughing a bit too forcefully. The others joined in with less spirited laughter. "Yes," Mr. Brand went on, not choosing to hear the reactions, "Robert instinctively knows where his bread is buttered, isn't that right, boys?"

Endicott Brand took hold of my arm and Dave's. "I think we'd better get Robert's friends a drink, or they'll never catch up to you, Norman," he said quietly. "We always forget to keep Norman away from the bar on special occasions like weddings. He's fine unless there's a special occasion."

"That's not true, 'Cott," Mr. Brand said pleasantly. "I've been known to get exceedingly drunk on the most ordinary occasions."

"Oh, Dad," Doodie whined with mock irritation. "Behave yourself. How often does your only daughter get married?"

"You have a point there, Doodie, my girl," Mr. Brand mumbled. His wife good-naturedly tugged his arm to lead him off, but as he turned to follow her he collided with a plump, old-young man, who had the puffy, rosy cheeks and wide eyes of an aging seraph. "What have we here?" Mr. Brand said, loosing himself from his wife's grasp. "Oh, have you gentlemen met the Right Reverend Hocking?" Dave and I shook hands with the Reverend. "Reverend Hocking is going to marry Doodie and Robert tomorrow," Mr. Brand continued, smiling emptily at the clergyman. "It's all part of the Great Boston Compromise. You see, the Reverend is with the Unitarian church — or is it the Universalist one? I always get them mixed up."

Reverend Hocking threw back his head and laughed, almost in imitation of Robert. "You should know, sir, you hired me," he said, with a child-like joviality.

"So I did, so I did," Mr. Brand drawled. "I'm used to Episcopalian weddings, you must understand. However, you brush up on your invocations for tomorrow, Reverend. I want everything to go off tickety-boo." Mr. Brand had a lot of trouble pronouncing the last word.

Reverend Hocking performed his laugh again, with a little less verve, though. "Don't worry about a thing, sir," he said, patting Mr. Brand's shoulder as if he were dusting it. The others had slipped away during the conversation, and Mr. Brand was at last persuaded to follow his wife, leaving the clergyman alone with Dave and me. Fortunately, our host reappeared with a maid holding a tray of martinis. "Well," he said, once we had our drinks in hand, "to the bride and groom!" We drank to the bride and groom, who had merged into a circle of guests across the room. While our host kept the three of us in conversation about the weather in Boston, I managed to scan the room quickly. Not far away were Robert's parents, sitting stiffly on a large settee and chatting with anyone who dropped by to pay his respects. A very thin, birdlike woman, who seemed vaguely familiar, sat between them, nervously examining the faces around her. She clutched a martini glass uncomfortably, bringing it close to her lips from time to time, but never quite daring to place it between them. She noticed my glances towards her and turned away, like an edgy robin. Then, all at once, she smiled fully at me, displaying very pink gums. I excused myself and headed for the settee.

"Oh, look who's here, dear," Mrs. Kurtz said to her husband as I approached them. They both seemed glazed with pride. "Isn't it wonderful?" Mrs. Kurtz asked, grasping my hand in both of hers. "Milton and I love Doodie and her family so. They're just the most wonderful dignified people, aren't they!"

"You don't see homes like this in the Grove — or even Newton — eh, boy?" Mr. Kurtz said confidentially. He raised his elbow as if to nudge me in the ribs, but he suddenly thought better of it. "These people really know how to spend their money. I was telling my wife that these old Yankees—"

Mrs. Kurtz cut him off, as I remembered she always did, by merely straightening her posture and looking away. "Have you met Robert's Aunt Ruth — Mrs. Greenspan?" she asked.

I shook hands with the frail, nervous woman sitting between them. "I think I met you once in the Grove, when I visited," she said in an unsure voice.

"Aunt Ruth is from New York," Mrs. Kurtz offered, still erect and holding her drink just above her lap. "She's one of Robert's favorite aunts, so she came all the way up to Boston for the wedding, just like you did."

"Whereabouts in New York do you live?" I asked Robert's aunt.

"Before my brother — Ruth's husband — passed away," Mrs. Kurtz said before her sister-in-law could answer, "Ruth lived on Central Park West."

"Now I got a little flat off the Grand Concourse," Aunt Ruth finally got out. "It's very comfy for me all alone, with the children grown up."

"Well, boy," Mr. Kurtz interjected, "What do you think of our Robert? Practically just out of law school and already he's making a regular name for himself," I told Mr. and Mrs. Kurtz that both Doodie and Robert were lucky to have each other, and all the parents should be very proud.

Robert called his parents over to a circle of people nearby. I was about to edge out of the way myself, when Aunt Ruth gestured quickly with her arthritic hand for me to bend over towards her. "You're a very good friend of Robert's, aren't you?" she whispered in my ear. I could think of little else to do but nod. "So what do you think?" she continued. "Is he going to be happy with this girl and all his fancy in-laws?" While I was pondering what to say, she went on. "Well, I don't mind telling you, I'm not so happy about all this. There are so many nice girls around, what does he have to get mixed up with these people for? A brilliant lawyer like him doesn't need anybody."

Out of the corner of my eye, I saw Dave looking at me with a pained expression. He was still conversationally trapped with the Reverend Hocking. "Don't worry," I said to Aunt Ruth, patting her bony shoulder, "everything's going to be fine. Excuse me, I have to join some friends."

Actually, Robert, hopping from group to group, performed the rescue operation for Dave. "Take your drinks in to dinner," he was telling the Reverend and Dave as I pulled up. "You may need them; the Brands love to make speeches at dinner."

Robert herded us into the dining room, a plush Georgian affair dominated by a fastidiously set table. We squinted at our place cards and I found myself between the two red-headed maids of honor, the Armstrong twins, and across from Aunt Ruth. Once we were seated, Endicott Brand, with the bride- and groom-to-be on either side of them, nodded to Reverend Hocking, who, neatly picking up his cue, bowed his head and waited for complete silence. "Lord, we thank Thee for what we are about to enjoy," he said angelically. I noticed that Aunt Ruth's lips were moving almost imperceptibly when she raised her head a few seconds after the others. She looked across at me questionably.

"That was very nice, Reverend," Norman Brand said, shifting unsteadily in his seat. "Very nice indeed. No frills, no redundancies. Performed with dispatch. Good job!" "Thank you," said the Reverend, forcing a smile.

Doodie leaned over towards her father. "Daddie, now you behave yourself," she warned, leveling her finger at him.

"Yes, dear, eat your soup," Mrs. Brand added. "It'll do you good."

The talk blurred into a dozen conversations. The redhead on my left, Mary Jo Armstrong, seemed contentedly assigned to talk to Dave, who was on her left, so I allowed myself to be attached to her twin, Mary Lou. For a girl of twenty-one or so, she possessed what appeared to be an extraordinary amount of baby fat, which gave her the rounded, immaculate quality of a Breck Shampoo advertisement. She kept things rolling by launching infinitely enthusiastic monologues. Her sister apparently took the same tack, and between the two of them, I felt as if I were attending a junior prom planning committee meeting.

". . . So the whole thing just kills me anyway," Mary Lou was saying, bobbing her curly head almost in perfect time to her speech meter, "because if it wasn't for Robert getting so mixed up between me and Mary Jo—everybody does, actually—he probably never would've met Doodie in the first place, or at least not so soon, anyway, and we all wouldn't even be here tonight. I guess you don't know the whole story, though, do you?"

"No," I answered, "I don't think I do." Although the food was beautifully prepared and served, it had a kind of institutional taste to it. The wine was very good, however, but it was making my mind wander.

"Well, anyway," Mary Lou continued, neatly placing her knife and fork in an inverted "V" on her practically full plate of pot roast, and turning intimately towards me, "it was this way. It was a scream, really. You do want to hear about it, don't you?"

"Yes," I said brightly. "By all means."

"Well, anyway," she went on, "Robert and Chad were very close friends at Eliot House, but Chad never got around to formally introducing Robert to Doodie because she was going steady with George Wilkinson, who is older and some kind of distant relation on Doodie's mother's side. Anyhow, everyone figured that, naturally, some day Doodie and George would be married, so everyone just kind of accepted it when Doodie never went out much with anybody else except George from the time she first started in at Radcliffe. I must say they really were made for each other, but that was before Robert. Well, you'll never get Chad to admit it, but he wrangled an invitation for Robert to the Harvey's Christmas party by pulling all kinds of strings, and then Chad asked me if I'd like to go with Robert. Of course, I had plenty of invitations — both Mary Jo and I did — but I said sure because I thought it would be fun, since Robert was a new face and so forth. So then Chad brought Robert over to the house to pick up Mary Jo and me, and they find Doodie there, because George was coming over to pick her up. Well, then Robert starts this whole routine about which one of us is which — just like everybody does when they meet us because we're so identical and all — only Robert was miles funnier about it than anybody else. He's so naturally witty anyway, don't you think? So we all went off to the Harvey's together and for the whole evening Robert hardly knew I existed. I mean he kept making Doodie laugh by telling her she'd have to stay close by him so she could help tell Mary Jo and me apart. It was just kind of love at first sight for him and Doodie from the very first moment on. Poor George never had a chance after that, the way Robert rushed Doodie with flowers and beautiful love letters and poems and everything. Doodie wanted to break up with George right away, only the Brands said she ought to wait. I guess they weren't too happy about Robert at first because of, you know, everything. But they were secretly engaged anyway, even when they were in college. George left college and went in the Marines to Korea or some place, so that helped the situation. Mary Jo and I were the only ones who knew about it because we and Doodie were always such close friends. . . ."

There are times when I feel I am living in a movie and this was one of them. Perhaps, it is from seeing too many movies, or perhaps, from not seeing enough of them, but ever so often I find my mind wandering according to standard cinematic techniques. For instance, while Mary Lou was talking, my eyes were focused on some dinner roll crumbs slightly to the right of my plate. The crisp, angular crumbs began to mesmerize me, so that it was almost painful to take my eyes off them. Then, Mary Lou's voice slowly faded and the crumbs dissolved, with all the predictability of a Warner's Brothers flashback, into a sunny lake, Lake Massasoit. My mind's camera took in, with a glorious panorama shot, the marshy cove of the Grove, Pond Avenue with its cluster of bungalows, the community raft, the family rowboats — all just as they were on any given summer afternoon. Then, there was a reverse shot of the Massasoit Lodge directly across the lake. The Lodge was a richly rustic summer resort, where old Boston families came to swim, fish, play golf, and sail. The people of the Grove considered the Lodge a never-never land that was forever barred to them, so they chose to avoid talking about it and, after a while, even caring about it.

Medium close-up of the Lodge's sandy beach (the only one on the lake). Robert, David, and myself, all about sixteen years old, were heading towards that beach in my outboard motorboat. Robert was sitting on the prow, squinting ahead and looking for all his worth like a young man inherently bound to the sea. Dave was huddled on the middle seat, grimacing and trying to avoid the spray and exhaust fumes. I was busily steering from the stern.

"All right," shouted Robert above the motor, in his best Captain Bligh tone, "now push the stop button a few times, but don't stall it out till I say so."

"Hey, look, Robert," I shouted back, "let's do it some other time. They'll kick us right the hell off." He pretended that he didn't hear me. Not wanting to act cowardly, I pushed the stop button as he ordered. The motor accommodated by skipping and even backfiring before it roared to life again. Robert peered unabashedly at the beach full of people lounging on blankets and under umbrellas, and they began to stare back at us. Then he flicked his hand at me several times. That was the signal, and I obediently made the motor stall out completely. We coasted smoothly in towards the beach. Before the bow touched the sand, a lifeguard scampered down from his white tower and waved at us.

"Hey," he said, as Robert leapt expertly from the prow onto the sand, "this is a private beach. You have to be a guest of the Lodge."

Standing every bit as tall as the lifeguard, Robert looked him right in the eye. "Say, our motor just conked out," he said easily. "We drifted in here so we could change the plugs. Nice place you got here."

The lifeguard was worried. "Yeah," he said, "well, get your boat off to the side there and fix it where the guests aren't swimming. And don't spill any gas on the water or the manager will have my head. You guys aren't from that place across the lake, are you?" Dave was beginning to pale under his tan.

"Hell no," Robert laughed and stuck out his right hand. My name is Robert Forsythe, from Boston. My friends and I use this lake once in a while when we're not in Maine. Mind if I take a swim?"

The lifeguard examined us from behind the protective shield of his sunglasses. "Yeah, I guess it's O.K.," he said slowly. "Only make sure you don't bother the guests any." Robert grinned at Dave and me and ambled down the beach discreetly behind the lifeguard.

Dave and I climbed out of the boat and pushed it towards the less populated end of the beach, where we convincingly tinkered with the motor. "What's the crazy sonofabitch doing now?" I asked Dave, who had a better sightline to watch Robert in action on the beach.

Dave gently struck the engine block a few times with a wrench, and, turning his head slightly, said, "He just sat down next to a real piece — one of these Miss Kimberley's School-type girls — and he's giving her some kind of line, I guess. Now, some guy is coming over and talking to him and pointing over here. . . . Now the guy is walking away and Robert and the girl are laughing and going into the lake."

"No kidding," I whispered incredulously. "Is he really doing it? I'll say one thing for him — he's got nerve." We tinkered for another ten minutes or so and then I told Dave to stay with the boat while I walked up the beach to get Robert. He was sitting amiably on a blanket next to a tall, delicately tanned blond girl, whose breasts were just beginning to fill out her latex bathing suit. As I approached them, I felt strangely underdressed, although I was wearing bathing trunks and a T-shirt, just as Robert was. Digging at the sand with my right foot, I told Robert the motor was fixed and we ought to be starting back. "You guys go on ahead," he said casually and grinning infectiously. "I'll walk back or something. Don't worry about me." He didn't introduce me to the girl.

". . . So then they came back from Rockport, all officially engaged and everything, and their parents got together for a kind of conclave and they all made plans for the wedding. Robert and Doodie got the idea of Reverend Hocking doing the ceremony so everybody was finally satisfied there. Isn't it all just like some kind of wonderful romantic story from the middle ages?" Mary Lou's question made the bread crumbs and the dinner party reappear in brilliant focus again. I looked directly at her for what seemed the first time in several hours. "Yes," I said, "It sure is."

The servants began to clear the dinner plates away. After an exchange of smiles, Mary Lou concluded that I was an unrewarding dinner partner and gave her full attention to Chad, who was on her right. While lighting a cigarette, I glanced at Aunt Ruth and discovered she was gazing straight at me. I flashed her an are-you-having-a-good-time? expression, and she turned away quickly, as if I had caught her in some devilish act. One of the maids came around behind her and attempted to take her plate, but Aunt Ruth surprised the maid by handing it to her. Mrs. Kurtz observed the episode and immediately said something to Aunt Ruth through her tightly stretched lips, which made the older woman appear jittery and unhappy.

The strangely piercing sound of a half-filled water glass being struck several times by Endicott Brand's teaspoon abruptly halted the conversations around the table. The host rose to his feet, his weight resting on his finger tips which remained on the table, and he heavily cleared his throat. "Ladies and gentlemen," he began slowly, "we often say in the Brand family that you have to work for your dinner. Well, tonight it can hardly be called work, really. To my mind, it's true pleasure, for we are here to celebrate a wedding tomorrow of two young people who are very close to all of us. If anyone knows a greater pleasure than that, I wish he'd let me know about it. My niece Doodie and Robert have chosen each other as partners for life, and basking in their radiance of this happy situation, I propose a toast to their continuing joy, good work, and success." He raised his wine glass and the rest of us arose with a bumbling of chairs and toasted the couple. Doodie and Robert looked at each other imploringly and clinked glasses, which caused everyone to laugh in a patronizing manner. There was a second or two of indecision, while those standing wondered whether to reseat themselves or not. Norman Brand made up our minds by starting to speak.

"Ott has expressed our feelings quite eloquently," he said, his speech still a little thick, "but there is one thing I am supposed to add as the honorable and esteemed father of the bride: I have not lost a daughter but I've gained a son. Well, all I can say is I must have gained quite a son if he could turn Doodie's head. A lot of young men have been trying to do that for years now, and, as far as I know, Robert has been the only successful one. It will be interesting getting to know our new son better, and I would like to go on record right now as saying, 'Welcome to the family, Robert.'"

Mr. Brand slumped down into his seat, as the ensuing applause reached its loudest point. He seemed to have spent more energy on his speech than he wanted to. Beaming alarmingly, Robert leaned across the table and shook hands with him, which lengthened the clapping for another few seconds. Again, there was a slightly embarrassed moment, while the guests searched each other's faces to see who would make the next toast. Someone suggested that Mr. and Mrs. Kurtz should speak, but Mrs. Kurtz refused for both of them, claiming they weren't good talkers. Aunt Ruth's face had become so tense that her chin had all but disappeared. I thought she looked sick. Finally, Reverend Hocking tinkled his glass and smiled benignly at his audience.

"As the representative here of the Divine Power," he said, in a more authoritative voice than he had used all evening, "and as the person who will bind Robert and Doodie in holy matrimony tomorrow, I feel I should offer my blessing at this time. These two — whom I am proud to call my friends — came to me and asked

Reminiscenses Of Aliyah Bet

BY ABRAHAM WEINGROD, IN THE JEWISH FRONTIER

One clear and cold day in April, 1946, a small Canadian corvette slipped quietly out of New York harbor and sailed out into a choppy Atlantic. The departure was unobtrusive and seemingly unnoticed. But on board that small ship, with its freshly-painted sides and renovated engines, was a most unusual crew, going forth on a most unusual mission.

There were seven or eight professional Jewish seamen — some American-born, some "Palestinian" — who knew how to run a ship, and had signed on primarily in order to earn some good money. The rest of us — the lowly deck hands, oilers and firemen — were experienced mostly in such matters as organizing Labor Zionist youth groups, running "Hechalutz" training-farms, and writing deprecatory articles on "Whither Jewish Youth?"

Together we were going forth, the first of several such boats, to bring "illegal" Jewish refugees from Europe to Palestine, to break the British blockade. Behind us were several months of preparation. We were taught at least the rudiments of what we were expected to do on the ship, and, for better or for worse, we got to know each other and learned to work together.

There was one very impressive Sunday afternoon when, in the presence of a small and select group of people, we were officially made members of the "Hagana" by a man who was later to play a key role in Israel's War of Independence. But together with the idealistic purpose and high resolve, we also saw things of which we were critical:

So many "Important People" were brought on board to look us over, that it seemed to make a mockery of the supposed secrecy of our mission; there was a great deal of last-minute improvisation and a lack of organization, which at times bordered on anarchy; and we resented the fact that among all the numerous people who concerned themselves with "the Boat," we were unable to find anyone to whom we, the boys who were going to take the chances and to carry the job through, could come to with our problems and complaints.

These things existed, to a greater or lesser degree, in all the various phases of our trip, and, in retrospect, they are probably inevitable in any venture of this type. But now all this was over. We were at sea and the engines were actually working smoothly. After all the years of "educational work," meetings, seminars, and endless talk, we were finally going to do something.

Two months later, we were towed into Haifa harbor by a British destroyer. On board were 1,200 refugees whom we had brought from Italy. We were dirty and exhausted, and we still had a month in the Athlit detention camp before we were to be free. But our mission was accomplished and we felt genuinely proud of ourselves. We had participated, successfully, in the making of Zionist history.

Looking back on those hectic weeks, sixteen years later, I try to recall some of the memories and impressions which remain most indelibly in my mind.

One of the surprises of the trip, for me at least, was that, except for a few brief moments, this high drama called Aliyah Bet was played out in a drab, matter-of-fact manner by nearly everyone concerned. There was a job to be done and to be gotten over with as quickly as possible, with no need or time for concern with the deeper significance of what was taking place.

It was not that I expected Zionist speech-making and Palestinian folk-dances on board the ship; but I did think that we would be stirred by a spirit of dedication, by a great common purpose. Somehow, this just never happened.

Most notably unaffected, I think, were the "sabras," the Palestinians, who joined the boat in Italy, and who were responsible for the welfare of the refugees who were packed on board ship in unbelievably crowed conditions. The "sabra," as everyone knows, is, by definition, harsh and prickly on the outside but soft and sweet inside, and of course, they were wonderful fellows to have on board — highly-trained, confident, reliable.

Yet they seemed a bit too cool, too detached, and it would perhaps be not too far wrong to say that they saw the whole thing as so much cargo that had to be delivered on a specified day at a specified destination. I do not recall ever seeing any warmth or camaraderie, any compassion, in their relations with the refugees.

I remember that I was particularly eager and curious about meeting face-to-face with the refugees, the remnants who survived the Nazi holocaust, about whom we had read, called meetings and raised money for, and whom we had come to help bring to a new life. Here on the boat I saw them, tier upon tier in the stifling heat, for ten days and nights. It was not a pretty picture.

Some were passive, dejected, seemingly beyond feeling. Some were sly and used every kind of wile to get for themselves an extra bowl of soup or a supposedly better place on deck on which to lie. One of the accepted techniques was to pretend a fit of fainting. This was done with such startling realism, that for a long time I refused to accept the scornful assurances of the refugees that this was mere trickery.

Group discipline was poor. I shall never forget the macabre scene I witnessed after the British sailors had boarded our ship just as we entered the territorial waters me to marry them. Nothing, as Mr. Brand so well put it, could give anyone more pleasure. In this particular case, it is indeed a deep honor I shall never forget, serving two individuals of varied backgrounds under one God's Ordinance. I wish you both the very ultimate of health and happiness."

Through the applause that followed, Robert arose and attempted to begin a speech of thanks. However, before he could gain everyone's attention, Aunt Ruth was shakily on her feet, clutching a slip of paper as if it were a governmental proclamation. "Robele," she began, her voice cracking. "Robele, just a minute, please, darling. Let me say something, please, to the people before you talk." Mrs. Kurtz furiously tried to whisper to her, but Aunt Ruth didn't seem to notice. The room became eerily quiet, as if everyone has just been informed that a bomb was hurtling towards the house and would arrive in exactly ten seconds.

Aunt Ruth coughed and, summoning her second wind, said, "Ladies and gentlemen. There is an ancient prayer of our people, which it is appropriate to say when two people get married. You will excuse me, but I want to say it now — for my nephew Robert's wedding: Y'voresho Adonoi . . ."

She pronounced the Hebrew words exultantly, like a political prisoner addressing his firing squad. Suddenly, I found myself imitating the open-mouthed expression on Robert's face; I realized what I was doing and looked at Dave. The corners of his mouth were slightly upturned in a controlled smile. Several guests, including Mrs. Brand, solemnly bowed their heads, while Mr. Brand mechanically played with a teaspoon on the tablecloth. Mr. Kurtz discovered that his tie needed constant straightening, and his wife seemed about to cry out in rage. "And now I will translate the prayer for everybody," Aunt Ruth went on doggedly, when she had finished reciting the Hebrew. "May the Lord bless thee and keep thee; May He cause His countenance to shine upon thee; and be gracious unto thee; May He lift up His face unto thee and grant thee peace."

Aunt Ruth slowly sat down. She seemed enormously relieved and managed a twitching smile at Robert and Doodie. Those whose heads were bowed tremulously lifted them. Dave reached around behind Mary Jo and tucked a wad of paper in my coat pocket. I surreptitiously extricated it and, cupping it in my hand, glanced down. "Mistah Kurtz — he dead," the pencil scrawl read.

Norman Brand put aside his teaspoon and turned towards Aunt Ruth, cocking his head slightly. "Do we drink to that or what?" he asked her.

Aunt Ruth grinned in a way that changed her features drastically. "Certainly you may, Mr. Brand, if you want to," she answered. Mr. Brand slumped back in his chair and didn't drink.

Our host was the next person to break the silence. "Mrs. Greenspan," he said, "I want to thank you for that lovely prayer."

"You're welcome," Aunt Ruth mumbled, without looking at him.

"Well now," Endicott Brand went on briskly, readjusting himself in his chair, "I think we've earned our dinner. Shall we take our coffee in the living room?"

"MY BANK" TO 2 MILLION CANADIANS

B of M

Who is our 3 millionth customer?

A housewife in Hamilton . . . a youngster in Yarmouth . . . a farmer in Fruitvale?

Frankly, we'd just be guessing. This year our total customers soared above the three-million mark. But which new customer in our network of 875 branches was the one between 2,999,999 and 3,000,001, we have no way of knowing.

But we do know our 3-millionth customer will probably use the B of M in many ways . . . to save for the things he wants, to finance his automobile at low cost, to pay his household bills and to keep his valuables safe.

If he is a businessman, he might use Canada's first bank to finance his day-to-day operations, to pay his employees, to collect and remit money the world over . . . if he is a farmer, "MY BANK" might be called upon to finance new trucks, modern barns and labour-saving electrical equipment.

He's very important to us, that 3-millionth customer. Never before in our long history have we been privileged to serve so many. We number with a good deal of pride those three million expressions of trust from people who call the Bank of Montreal "MY BANK".

On Sabbath nights, in many Jewish homes in Canada, a decanter of Mazel Tov wine finds its place on the starched tablecloth, right beside the challah.

Mazel Tov is a wine with a taste you'll 'remember', a ruby red, richly sweet 'kiddush' wine made of Concord grapes grown in the vineyards of the Niagara Peninsula.

Mazel Tov made 'Kosher l'Pesach' under strict rabbinical supervision, is available throughout the year, for every "simcha".

of Palestine. By pre-arranged plan we immediately shut down the engines and interspersed among the refugees, in order to avoid detection.

Sensing that there was no longer any organized authority on board, a group of refugees broke into the supply-hold and in a night-long orgy devoured everything they could put their hands on. Our pleas that they were only making themselves sick were of no avail.

Fortunately, however, there was another, and better, side to the coin. Within a very short time it became known on board that we were "Amerikaner," young Jews who had actually left fabulous America in order to help bring them to Palestine. At first the refugees were incredulous, but afterwards we were given to understand, in many small ways, their appreciation. We would sometimes be embarrassed to see them pushing each other out of the way whenever we would come up on the top deck for a few minutes of fresh air.

Actually they were not a single amorphous mass at all. Within a short time we learned to distinguish between many distinct groups. There were the Greeks, who reputedly were prone to throwing knives and kept strictly to themselves; there were several rather well-organized youth groups from Czechoslovakia; there was a group of elderly Russian Jews who obviously had seen better days, and who, under the circumstances, did a remarkable job of maintaining around themselves a semblance of orderliness and cleanliness; almost of respectability.

By far the most impressive were the Partisans. They looked like what they were — the embodiment of a tough, indomitable will-to-live. They were perhaps the only people whom we felt that we should like to talk to, to become friendly with. We were impressed with their youthfulness, individuality and vitality. Despite what they had gone through — or perhaps because of it — we found in them an innate decency, even gentleness, which we could not have expected.

After this short but intense period of living with the refugees, I felt that, after all that they had been through, and with all their obvious shortcomings — crude, quarrelsome, selfish — the great majority of them were still basically sound and healthy, that they would be capable of forgetting the past and starting afresh. They were neither morally degraded or psychologically sick. There was still hope.

The most dramatic and moving part of the whole journey occurred during the final few minutes we spent on the ship. As we approached within a few hundred meters of shore, we saw the British army waiting for us at the dock.

Behind them, in the background and on all the roof tops, were hundreds of Jews waving, cheering and shouting to us. On board ship we had all crowded onto the top deck and were waving and shouting back. We felt a sudden surge of unity. Without any organized plan, in total spontaneity, we burst into the famous "Song of the Jewish Partisans," and then "Hatikva."

No one moved while we sang not even the British. It was our moment of glory. When we finished, the boat was tied up to the pier and we were whisked off to the internment camp in guarded buses. I do not know what the soldiers thought of it all, but we were profoundly moved.

We felt that we had proven again that no power on earth, and certainly not British bayonets, could prevent the return of the Jew to his homeland. We had demonstrated, in our own way, the triumph of the human spirit.

Once we were released from camp everyone went his own way and I never saw any of those twelve-hundred again. But what has become of us, the dozen or so crew members, in the intervening years? Within a year three returned to "greener pastures" in America. One was ambushed and killed by Arabs while driving a tractor during the terrible winter of 1947. Another died a few years ago of natural causes.

Of the remainder, some are members of kibbutzim and the rest are scattered in various places in the country. We have all changed in these sixteen years. Ideological fevers have cooled; we are all good family men now, and have climbed the ladder of economic progress with varying degrees of success. The rat may be more modest, but we have a rat race in Israel, too.

But none of us are sorry, I am sure, that once, in a particular moment of our people's history, we were among those who answered the call.

AMERICAN NEWSPAPER EDITORS EXAMINED EVERY ASPECT OF EICHMANN ARREST AND TRIAL

cific statute in existence at the time of the crime. The Israeli law under which Eichmann is tried reflects this crystallization of the common law which denounces as an international offense the racial or religious persecution of any people. The same principle inspired the Nuremberg Charter and won the unanimous affirmation of the United Nations General Assembly on December 11, 1946. The continuous application of these principles to specific cases strengthens their universal acceptance as established law. It is as such a precedent and as another step forward in the slow development of law that the Eichmann trial may have its most enduring significance.

Argentina, opening the debate on Article XV, demanded that the phrase "international law" be replaced on the ground that the principle as established by the Nuremberg trials had not really been accepted by the United Nations. International penal law, the Argentine delegate insisted, "had not yet acquired a definitive form." He proposed an amendment to strike paragraph 2.

Saudi Arabia supported this view. It condemned the Nuremberg trials as being "in many ways the tribunals of the victors." It made the comment that among the victors were those "equally guilty and who should have been tried but who got off scot-free." A number of Latin American countries, as well as Spain, Portugal, Italy, and Japan, also came to the assistance of Argentina. But a coalition of Western European democracies, the Soviet bloc, the Asian bloc and Israel defeated the effort to change the words "international law" to "applicable law." The vote was 47 to 29, with 10 abstentions. The Argentine proposal to delete paragraph 2 was defeated 51 to 19, with 10 abstentions. The majority agreed with Israel that the Argentine amendment was "a retrograde step" which would "undo" some of the UN's "most constructive work" in the field of international law; and with Ceylon's view that the amendment would not only "destroy the validity" of international law, but it also ignored the UN's purpose of "formulating principles which might prevent the occurrence of Nazi-type crimes." In a final vote, Article XV, unamended, was approved 56 to 0, with 23 abstentions.

The Argentine viewpoint was not inconsistent with its accommodating role since World War II as a haven for escaped Nazis and war criminals. According to an Argentine parliamentary investigating commission, this began during the war when Nazi intelligence services used Argentina as a center for their South American operations. Nazi colonies made up of officers and crew of the scuttled Graf Spee sprang up in the south suburbs of Buenos Aires; in Cordoba; and elsewhere. The dictatorship of Juan Peron offered a favorable climate for such high ranking Nazis as General Hans Rudel, still an important figure in the current international neo-Nazi movement, and for such war criminals as Ante Pavelic, gauleiter of Croatia, who, together with other Croatian and Hungarian fascists, escaped to Argentina in 1947. (Pavelic, closely associated with Eichmann, left in 1958, died a year later in Spain.)

Dr. Joseph Mengele is particularly notorious among a long list of individuals charged with war crimes and shielded from judicial proceedings by Argentine authorities. He was camp physician with the rank of SS Haupt-Sturmfuehrer at Auschwitz. Documents prepared for the War Crimes Tribunal at Nuremberg included sworn testimony that Mengele selected Jewish girls as guinea pigs for the loathsome types of experiments conducted in the camp's "research center."

In June 1959, the Public Prosecutor of Freiburg (Wurttemberg-Baden), after establishing that Mengele had been living in Argentina for a number of years, asked Bonn authorities to seek his extradition. Two months later, the West German Embassy in Buenos Aires reported to Bonn that the Argentine Foreign Ministry seemed to regard Mengele's crimes as being of a political nature and, therefore, in Argentina's view, the extradition treaty between the two countries did not apply. The official Argentine reply took almost a year. It came when Argentine President Frondizi was visiting Bonn: If the German government could give sufficient proof that Mengele was hiding in Argentina, Frondizi's government was prepared to extradite him. In the meantime, however, Mengele had disappeared again.

Dr. Karl Klingenfuss was counsellor to the so-called Jewish Department in Hitler's Foreign Ministry. He came to Argentina in 1949, later became president of the Argentina-German Chamber of Commerce in Buenos Aires. (Earlier, in 1939-40, as German Legation counsellor in Buenos Aires, he directed the activities of the local Argentine Nazi organization.) He is wanted on charges of ordering the deportation and murder of Serbian Jews, and for his part in planning the Nazi's "Final Solution" for Europe's Jews. His extradition was requested by the Public Prosecutor of Nuremberg in 1952, thence forwarded by Bonn to Argentina. The latter rejected it in March, 1953, on grounds that the crimes for which Klingenfuss was accused were "only an unconsummated incitement to manslaughter," not punishable under Argentine law. On June 8, 1960, Bonn announced that a subsequent extradition request had been made in 1959, and this had also been rejected.

German Nazis in Egypt have been joined by fleeing Italian and Swiss fascists who had served Hitler's New Order. Antonio Montegazzi, once an officer in Mussolini's militia and still being sought as a war criminal, is now organizing a militia in Egypt. Georges Oltramare and Daniel Perret-Gentil are one-time Swiss fascists who now work on Radio Cairo's French transmissions.

The existence of an effective underground railway channeling war criminals to Egypt seems unquestioned. A recent escapee who travelled on the railway is Ludwig Zind. He fled a one-year sentence by a West German court for anti-Semitic utterances and ended up in Libya, teaching geology. Returning from a holiday in Germany, he was recognized in Naples and arrested before he could board ship for Libya. He is now in an Italian jail. The organizer of the railway is believed to be Von Leers who, from his address at 52 11th Street in the Cairo suburb of Meadi, has also been active in promoting anti-Jewish propaganda on radio and by pamphlets.

The list of hunted war criminals is a long one. The Central Agency for the Uncovering of Nazi Crimes, at Ludwigsburg, West Germany, coordinates the search for former Nazis wanted by West German state ministries of justice and criminal police bureaus. Recently, on the basis of its findings in six cases, warrants were issued for the arrest of 1200 individuals accused of crimes in a half-dozen of the Nazi's infamous concentration camps. The search for them is far from ended.

Particular attention has focused on those who participated with Eichmann in the notorious "Wannsee Conference" of January 20, 1942, which decided on the details of the "Final Solution." Dr. Robert Kempner, an American prosecutor at Nuremberg, writing in the journal Freiheit und Recht (September, 1960), notes that most of the conference participants disappeared without a trace. They include Gauleiter Dr. Meyer; State Secretary Dr. Buehler; Major General Hoffmann; Police Commanders Dr. Schoengarth and Dr. Lange; and Gestapo Chief Mueller. Two of the participants were living in Germany after the war but they were neither arrested nor indicted. One was Dr. Leibbrandt from Rosenberg's ministry, the other was State Secretary Kloepfer, the representative of Martin Bormann. Indeed, the only participant tried and convicted was State Secretary Stuckart. He was released because of ill health before completion of his sentence and shortly afterward died in an auto accident.

The long arm of justice has also failed to apprehend many who were members of Eichmann's immediate Budapest command. According to Joel Brand, the following have disappeared: Karl Hroslnek, the chief administrative officer in Budapest; Frita Martin, Eichmann's secretary; and Heinz Roethke, his Paris representative. Brand, writing in the October, 1960, issue of Freiheit und Recht, also noted that Eichmann's transport export, Franz Novak, was living undisturbed in Austria. Three months later, on January 21, 1961, Novak was finally arrested by Austrian police.

There may be further disclosures of the whereabouts of Eichmann's confederates in the "Final Solution," and revelations about powerful forces that shield war criminals in West Germany and elsewhere. The inner operation of the underground railway for Nazis may be disclosed and its purpose and objective laid bare.

Some Nazi luminaries have come to Argentina for a brief stay, then moved on elsewhere. The energetic S.S. Colonel Otto Skorzeny, famed for his exploits in rescuing Mussolini and abducting Admiral Horthy's son, was one. In recent years Skorzeny has turned up in Ireland whora, according to Irish sources, he has purchased a farm near Dublin. A few years ago, he published his war memoirs in an Irish Sunday newspaper. Joel Brand, a knowledgeable source on Nazi activities, reports that Skorzeny continues to maintain close contact with the current neo-Nazi movement.

Johann Von Leers, a collaborator of both Goebbels and Nazi ideologist Alfred Rosenberg, arrived in Argentina in late 1951 or early 1952. He became a regular contributor to Der Weg, a violently anti-Semitic journal distributed in West Germany and elsewhere. In 1956, Von Leers emigrated to Cairo to direct anti-Jewish propaganda in the Israel Propaganda Department of the Egyptian Ministry of National Guidance.

The precise number of former Nazi war criminals hiding out in Argentina is not known. It is sufficiently large, however, to have led Argentine Congressman Ernesto San Martino to query formally his Foreign Minister on his government's "duty to take effective steps (that would indicate) to the world that this country can no longer act as a refuge for the majority of war criminals." The President of the German Bundestag bluntly told a group of Argentine journalists that "Buenos Aires is the best place for Nazi activities."

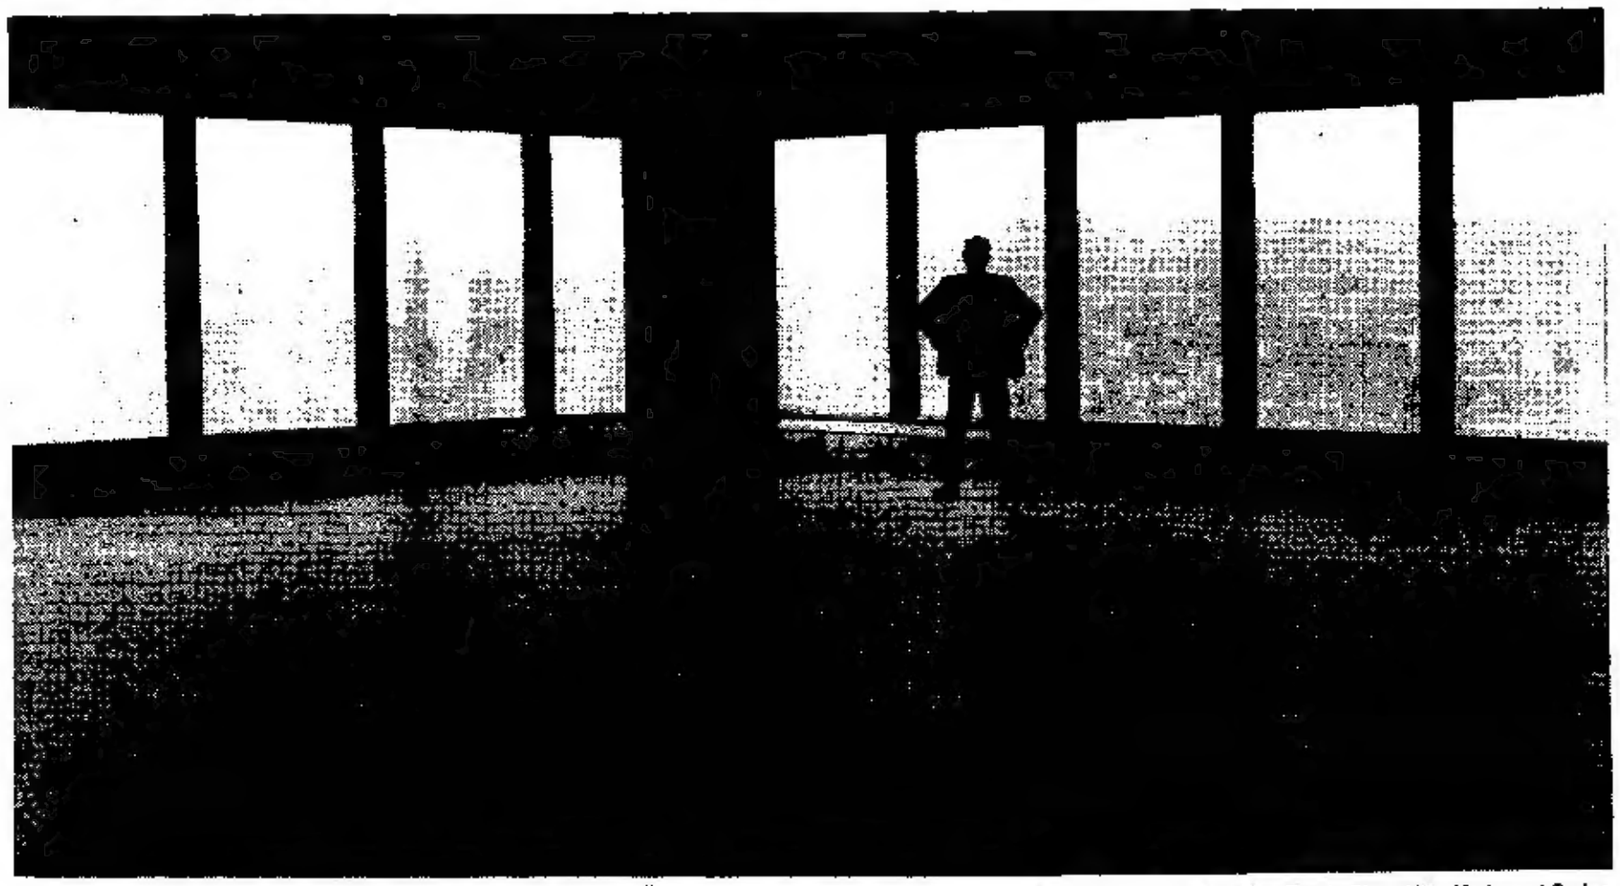
Another convenient sanctuary for war criminals is the United Arab Republic. The UAR's response to an extradition request for Hans Eisele, former S.S. Obersturmfuehrer, clearly contradicts the position of its delegate to the UN General Assembly's Committee III, who opposed the Argentine view and supported Article XV as "one of the chief pillars of our constitutional heritage." Dr. Eisele was camp physician of Buchenwald where he is said to have administered lethal injections to thousands of its inmates. In July, 1958, he escaped to Cairo, avoiding arrest and trial for murder in West Germany. UAR authorities have refused repeated West German requests for his extradition, claiming that, under Egyptian law, criminal proceedings cannot be taken more than ten years after an alleged crime has been committed.

Two other Nazis linked with Eichmann who are being sought are believed to be in the Syrian province of the UAR. One is Alvis Brunner, alias Dr. Georg Fischer, who was Vienna representative of the Nazi Security Service. He is alleged to have supervised personally the deportation of the Jewish communities of Slovakia and Salonika to the gas chambers in Poland. The other is Franz Rademacher, who ran the Nazi Foreign Ministry's Jewish Department and, as such, was in frequent communication with Eichmann. He was convicted at Nuremberg in 1952 for complicity in the October, 1944, butchery of 1500 Yugoslav Jews in the Belgrade ghetto. His sentence was a light three-and-one-half years imprisonment. He appealed, jumped bail and, with a faked Spanish passport, is believed to have made his way first to Lebanon, thence to Damascus.

Scores of other Nazis have made their way to Cairo and serve the Nasser regime in one way or another. Bernard Bender, chief of the Gestapo's special section on Jewish underground movements in Poland and USSR, has worked in the Egyptian Security Service under the name of Lt. Col. Ben Salem. Leopold Gleim, head of the Gestapo bureau in Warsaw (he was sentenced to death in absentia in 1945) became Al-Nasher, an adviser of the Egyptian Security Service. Joachim Daemling, Gestapo head in Dusseldorf, is now adviser to the Cairo police and the Security Service, and is in charge of the organization of concentration camps. Heinrich Sellmann, an S.A. group leader and Gestapo officer in Ulm, is now Muhammed Suleiman, assistant to Gleim in organizing police and security services. Dr. Heinrich Willermann, S.S. officer, became Naim Fahum and has served as a physician at a concentration camp near Alexandria. Louis Heiden, who ran a news agency in Nazi Berlin, is translator and distributor of Hitler's Mein Kampf in the Arab world. (The book sold almost a million copies in 1956-58.) Hans Appler, assistant to Goebbels, is active in the Islamic Congress as a specialist in anti-Jewish literature.

CORRECTION

The article, "Our Far-Flung Correspondents - Beersheba, Eilat and Sodom", by Joseph Wechsberg, reprinted by permission from the New Yorker, in the Chanukah Festival Magazine Issue, inadvertently appeared without credit due the author. The Canadian Jewish Review regrets the accident and offers this apology.



This tenant will occupy his office in Place Ville Marie next Spring.

Can't wait for Spring occupancy?

Come and see Place Ville Marie today. Occupancy is Spring, 1962, but most of the advantages of a cantilever design are clearly visible now in the cruciform Royal Bank of Canada Building.

It soars to 42 floors. The views of Montreal are magnificent. Especially through window areas 20% larger than in conventional new buildings.

And because the columns are 16 feet inside the building, there are no obstructions on exterior walls. These are exclusive advantages of the cantilever.

The rent you pay is determined by amount of space, height, location, length of lease. But all space has features you won't find at any price in conventional new buildings. That's why it makes good sense financially to locate with us.

Compare for yourself.

Take our "comparative tour" of the cruciform building. Call Ron McFarlane at UN: 1-4703 or write on letterhead to him at Webb & Knapp (Canada) Ltd., 1010 St. Catherine St., West, Montreal, P.Q.
